

Figure 7: Apoptosis or programmed cell death helps shaping the hand. Apoptosis plays a significant role in morphogenesis during development. For example, during limb development, apoptosis of the cells in the area between fingers allows the separation of digits into individual structures, giving rise to the characteristic hand shape.